The reconstruction of the history of the ownership of the French works was the primary aim of the research—the dealers, collectors and exhibitions are discussed only in so far as they contribute to this end. Here already one begins to suspect a not entirely objective approach: a number of Van Gogh's flower still lifes, for example, are not included in the catalogue, as Feilchenfeldt's believes these are inauthentic; no argument or proof for this assessment is offered.

It is the goal of that kind of modern artist to run the red light and hit the old la
