Indicator lights let you know about problems like a non-functioning brush roll or blocked hose. Corinne Dufour invented a device that sucked dust into a wet sponge. His invention didn't sell among manufacturers, so he began his own company. But do we count from there, or do we count from when John Thurman invented the first motorized version? McGaffey patented his sweeping machine but again, this was not much of a success because it was crank operated. Dufour for instance, invented a device which sucked dust into a wet sponge. For example, Corinne Dufour invented a device that sucked dust into a wet sponge and David Kenney designed a huge machine that was installed in a cellar and connected to a network of pipes leading to each room of a house. Thank goodness Thurman made house calls.
